Public Access to Buildings

Providing public access to buildings, monuments, and natural heritage landscapes of cultural significance is essential for preserving history, promoting education, and fostering cultural appreciation. Amity University Madhya Pradesh allows access to these sites allows people to engage with their cultural heritage, deepening their understanding of the past and strengthening their connection to their surroundings. The university use to conduct Amicroma event every year and invites outsiders for accessing the campus for various cultural and sports activities. Moreover, responsible management of public access, including limits on visitor numbers and environmental protection measures, is crucial to safeguarding these sites for future generations. Thus, our university maintains the record of all the people who are coming in our university for admissions, and for other useful purposes. In this way, public access becomes a vital tool in the sustainable development of communities, enriching both their cultural identity and economic resilience.
